

Rumplestiltskin

Once upon a time there lived a miller with a beautiful daughter named Anne.
Anne was very important to her father, but he foolishly boasted to the King that he could spin gold.
One morning, the King would never walk free, so Anne had to go to the tower and tell him.
She sadly sobbed because she knew she could not spin gold, but the King appeared and said she must weep.
The King was splendid and planned to give Anne a necklace, but she refused. He then gave her two rings.

Three years later, a boy named Conrad was born. He was very beautiful and the King wanted to marry him. Rumplestiltskin was very angry and he decided to punish the King. He went to the King's room and he saw the King's daughter, Anne. He asked her to marry him and she said yes. He then took her to his room and he showed her his magic. He said, 'I can spin gold.' He then spun gold for the King. The King was very happy and he gave Rumplestiltskin a reward. Rumplestiltskin was very happy and he lived happily ever after.
